fore it any one year, and it is believed to be greater, in proportion to the income, than that secured by any other company.

3. It has cald to the widows and ordhans of deceased members $.52,785. Although this is a large sum, it is but little more than the receipts from interest.

4. It has largely increased its surplus—thus giving greater security to the policy holders. It must be remembered that the surplus $254,400—in addition to the capital of $1,000,000—is entirely for the security of the policy holders. The surplus of a mutual company represents principally the dividend which is to be paid during the current year. The surplus of the nanonal is over and above the dividend, which was really paid in advance by the rates being lower.

5. It diminished its ratio of expenses to receipts.

6. It increased the net amount at risk 2½ times as much as it did in 1572. The large increase ($6,534,000) of insurance in lorce is exceedingly grativing, as it shows the increased condence of the policy holders and the public in the company. It is believed that this is a larger proportionale growth than that made by any other company in the country.
